

Electronic Submission via the National Land Information Service (NLIS)

The National Land Information Service (NLIS) is a leader in the provision of electronic local authority property searches and offers the highest standards of electronic property search accessibility available on the market today. The NLIS Hub connects solicitors and licensed conveyancers directly to land and property information held by local authorities and other official data providers.

Currently there are two NLIS channels, SearchFlow and Thames Water Property Searches, which connect directly to the NLIS Hub. A channel provides electronic access to authoritative land and property information, it also acts as a route to market for other land and property searches and products. If you are interested in obtaining a conveyancing search through the National Land Information Service, you should contact the licensed NLIS channels using the links below.

Over 21 million NLIS searches have been undertaken since its launch in 2001. Today it is the safest, most secure and the only regulated data hub in the land and property information market.
